FACULTY

East High school has worthy reason to hold in respect and esteem its fine faculty. The student body believes this a splendid opportunity to express its appreciation to the teachers of that group who untiringly work for the best interests of their pupils, for their sincere cooperation, their unselfish devotion, and enthusiastic encouragement.

It is, to a large extent, their influence that has placed East High in the outstanding position it retains today. Because of their constant patience, a quality developed by their added experience, because of their kindly, sympathetic, and helpful attitude toward their students, and greatly, because of their individual earnestness of purpose and strong characters, they will long be remembered by the members of this institution, whose minds at this particular stage, are fortunately, highly impressionable.

The guidance of the instructors and the ideals they inculcate in the minds of those who, upon leaving East High, will be obliged to face life's major problems, will remain with them, as strengthening powers. Through their keen interest in the students' activities and through their desire to aid in furthering the accomplishments of that body, they prove their great personal concern for the welfare of the school, and surely they labor with the school motto in mind, "For the Service of Humanity."

Class Will

by Kay Neal

We, the class of January, 1938, having established a commendable and most admirable example for all succeeding classes, do hereby, and without remorse, bequeath to the undergraduates of East High School the following abilities and possessions:

Marie Whitman leaves some of her unmistakable charm to Lois Johnson, who already has plenty of her own.

Art Ferguson gives some of his inches to Lynn Gleason.

Jeanne Shaw wills her good looks to Alyce Mundt ('Tain't fair!')

Clarence McCloud relinquishes his smooth dancing ability to anyone who would like to have it. (The line forms on the right, boys.)

Theresa Sandler leaves her flair for comedy to Kay Glines.

Roe Williams gladly gives his grand physique to Francis (Shorty) Liddell.

Mildred Stapp wills her sparkle to Ruth MacMillan.

Wayne Coleman donates some of his quiet manner to Jim Jordan, of the shy, retiring nature.

Frances Green leaves her terpsichorean ability to Barbara Haney.

Bernita Shores' pleasant willingness to oblige goes to Maxine Noonan, who is pretty nice about such things herself.

Art Reese relinquishes his athletic prowess to anyone who is similarly inclined.

Lee Wright bequeathes her lasting cheerfulness to Jean Marie Hillestad.

Harold Krohn gives his all-around executive ability to Christy Larson.

Betty Pierce shares her competence with Flora Ostrem.

Irene Reid relinquishes her debating ability to Minnie Lemson.

Jack Costello bestows his pleasant smile upon anyone whom he happens to encounter.

Reva Booth leaves her ability to get along with anybody to Barbara (Doc) Witmer, who seems to do all right by herself.

Herb Merritt gives his swell tenor voice to Jack Bach. (You'll go places, Jack!)

I know any number of girls who would be only too glad to have Marjorie Wilson's lovely auburn locks! (I spoke first, Marge!)

Bob Stuart leaves his aggressiveness to Bill Ellis.

Ruth Lyman's sweet personality goes to Janet Addy. (Lucky girl!)

Mildred McGrew donates her enormous appetite to anyone who wants it.

Inez Olson leaves her ten twinkling toes to Betty Lou Heintz.

James Rule's speech-making ability goes to Bill (Squint-eye) Martin. (How 'bout that, Bill?)

Bill Parker leaves his splendid track record with Dick Bauma.

Marjorie Winburn relinquishes her high scholastic rating to Barbara Burretts.

Maxine Neuwerth's artistic brush and palette go to Noble Gammell.

Too bad Barbara Phillips isn't a senior. I'd like first chance at that lovely voice of hers.

Keith Campbell bestows his poetic faculties upon Jean Hedlund. (OH gee, kid!)

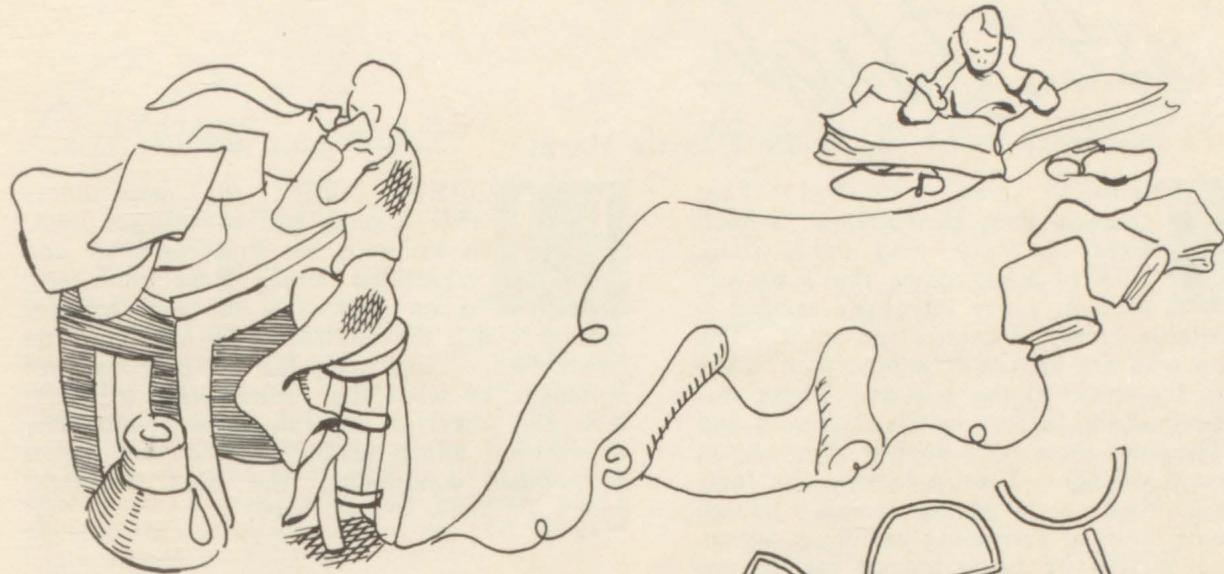

Lastly, I, being in sound (?) mind (well, anyway,) do hereby will and bequeath to anyone who feels strong enough to assume the responsibility—the job of writing the next class will!

NOTE: It is understood that the above mentioned persons will receive their newly-acquired possessions in the spirit in which they were given, and also that they will use them to the best possible advantage.

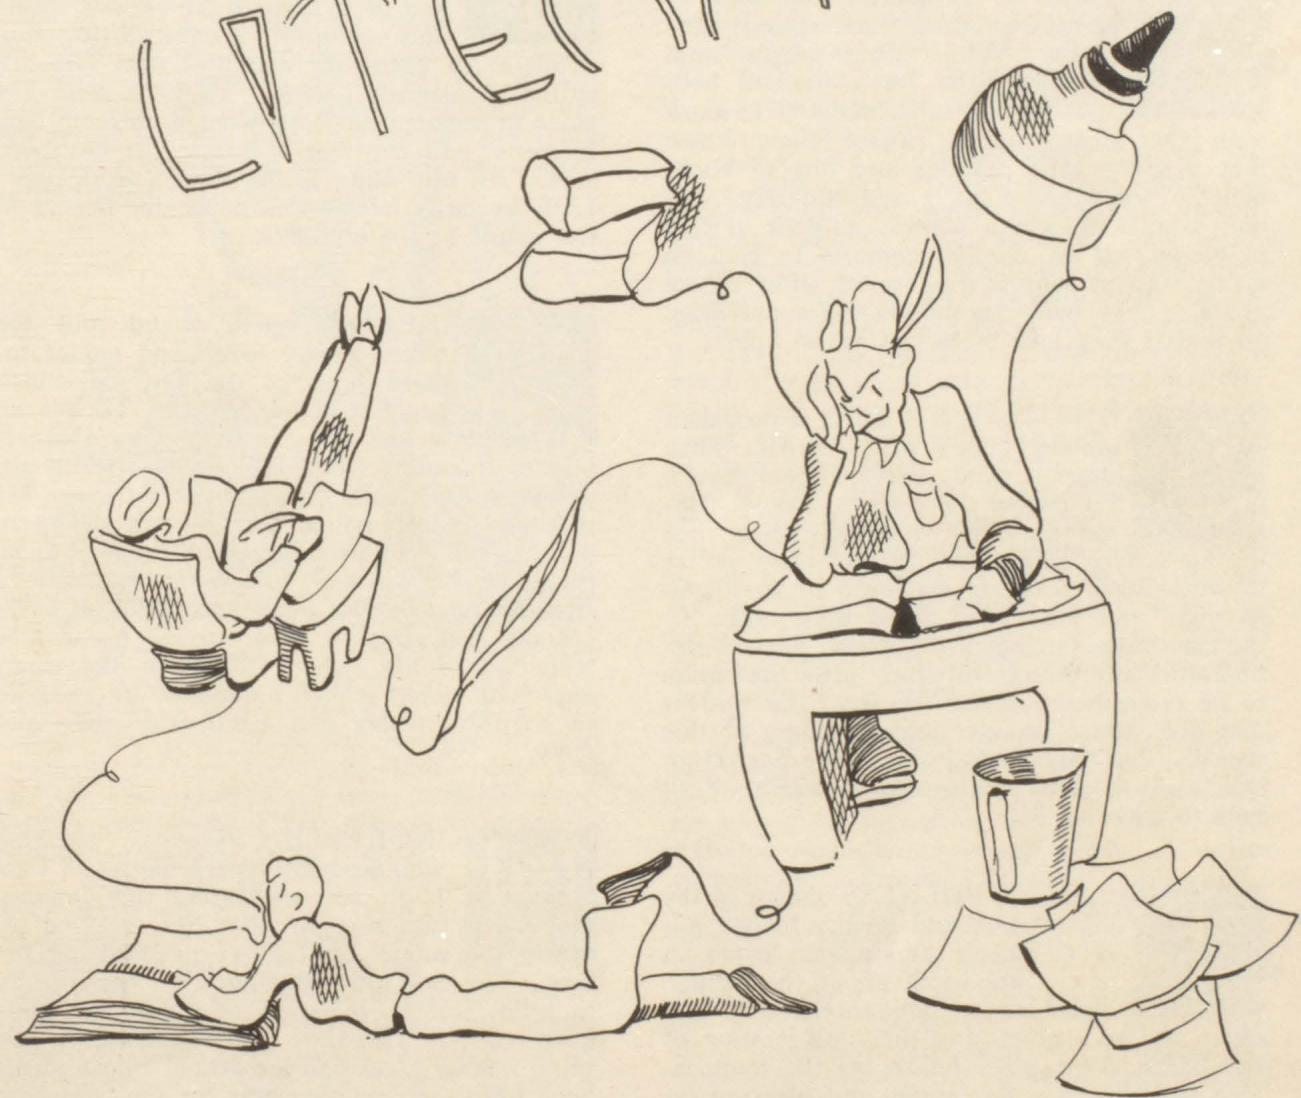

LITERACY

East High

By MARTHA HAYES

ENERGY! Pep! Vitality! That characterizes East High School! Back of every song that's sung, back of every game that's played, back of every job that's tackled is an illimitable supply of energy and spirit. The students who are energetic, peppy, and vitally alert go far ahead of the crowds. These students become the leaders in the classroom and out. They use their extra supply of energy in sports and outings. Take a look at the football, basketball, or wrestling teams. Watch the tennis, golf, or swimming groups in action. There is ENERGY being burned for the improvement of the individual and his school.

ATHLETIC honors are obtainable by perseverance and hard work at East High. While other people sing, "You've gotta be a football hero . . .," East High's crews go to work with other ideas in mind. These fellows know that it takes hard practice and lots of backbone to win a game fairly and squarely. No one expects to win a contest without getting in shape, so no one is surprised to find so many athletes vigorously training after school hours. They learn teamwork and cooperation so that if they lose there can be no alibis.

STUDIOUSNESS is prevalent among pupils and teachers alike during (and after) school hours. Of course there are a few who insist upon playing away their time during school hours, but the majority prefer to work when they are supposed to work and to relax and play hard when they may. In the classroom, intelligent discussion, earnest deliberation and thoughtful study affix the points to be remembered in the minds of the student and give him a broader understanding of this world. This careful study keeps the East High scholastic standard high—a goal which we all help to make.

HOUGHTFULNESS shown in the cooperation and loyalty to one another among the students leaves an air of good-will about the school. Kindness to one another, to teachers and to visitors, and the consideration of the rights of the other fellow lay the foundations for harmonious relations and pleasing intercourse.

HOPEFULNESS, the hopefulness that inspires and encourages, combined with the high character and reputation which East High students possess is the assurance of success which the student body has in all its enterprises. They hope for the best and are optimistic of what the future holds in store. It is this cheerful hopefulness and agreeable expectation which makes the students try to accomplish maintaining the high character which we know so well here.

INDUSTRY in the school and out develops leaders. Having no time to waste, students organize clubs and participate in the various sports and activities. Active participation in all extra curricular activities is a pleasure to the industrious person. There is always a place to broaden one's knowledge, develop new interests, and cultivate a hobby. It has been said, "An idle mind is the devil's workshop." Little space is left to this particular person in the minds of the students.

GENEROSITY to friend and foe alike, charity to all and malice toward none is the attitude which prevails at our school. To live up to the school motto, "For the service of humanity," the East High boy or girl practices generosity and thoughtfulness. He is liberal and broadminded, always willing to give the other fellow due credit. Freedom from prejudice helps our students to maintain a friendly relationship with students from other schools, and after all, these are the friendships which make life richer. Contests and meetings with other schools' students are reduced to friendly rivalry and freed from spite and envy.

EONORABLE students, students who are truly representative of East High are graduating this January into a world that has received innumerable East High graduates before. The new graduates have the opportunity to follow in the footsteps of those who have gone before. This they will do admirably and bring further honors to the school whose ideals have been their guiding star for the last three years.

Pigskin Lingo

By MARGARET PARKINSON

"Oooh, look at Jack, he was tripped—gee, don't Bob look handsome in that football suit—which way is the team goin'—see that man in the red shirt and black pants—tee hee, look who Bill's with—wonder where he picked her up—rah rah rah ziz boom bah—we want a touchdown—gosh, her hat's crazy—shh, she heard me—hold that line—hold that line—ha ha, I smashed your derby—give me your cane and I'll poke that old buzzard who's cheerin' for the other team in the ribs—help—I gotta sneeze—kachoo.

"57 had better tackle 63—wish she wouldn't wear that old red fingernail polish—I wouldn't even paint a barn with it—remember when I was on the team—we never lost a game—had a birthday the other day—gettin' to be an old man—block that kick—block that kick—how about a touchdown, youse guys—how's the old man in English—does he still lay it on like he used to—hurrah—good old Eddie—he caught the ball—or did he—lissen to that band.

"The other team's got the ball—don't they see it—look at the scoreboard—7 to 7—a tie—if we don't win, I won't be able to face them there kids—what did you get on your exam yesterday—I flunked—everybody else did too—was that rain I felt—probably somebody's gum—wish I had some—gee thanks—you're a pal—just when I needed it most.

"Look at him run—he's faster'n anybody I ever seen—what time is it—why don't you know—who does she think she is anyway—she's gettin' too darn stuck up for her own good—down in front—your heads make better doors than windows—why don't that peanut man come back—boy, this is excitin'—he's got the ball—he's slipped—his nose is bleedin'—tough lick—whee, he got her through to Pat Pat's made it—we won!—We won! Hurrah!

Trials of the Quill Room

By JAMES GIBSON

Crunch - crunch - crunch
Cruunch - cruunch - cruunch
Cruuuunch - cruuuunch - cruuuunch

No, not a boy eating peanuts, not the sound of a rock crusher, but the sound accompanying the physical expression of intent and intricate mental processes functioning at double time. It is the Quill staff munching its pencils.

Contrary to one's first impression, this low, boringly monotonous undertone which daily wells from the portals of room 218 is not just an ordinary sound, but embodies the individuality of thought and action of each member of the staff. Lend me your analytic ears and we shall delve into this babel of sound and determine the workings of the staff.

Listen carefully now. Surely you can hear . . . and surely enough, as you listen, this conglomerate sound resolves itself into its constituents, bringing you distinctly and separately the respective "crunch" of each staff member. Let us first consider the person whose "crunch-crunch-crunch" rolls merrily on its way. This person has just received his literary assignment and is in the blissfully happy and carefree state of mind which precedes his awakening to the real significance of that assignment. Next comes the person who is more advanced in his Quillatic experience. The tempo of his "cruunch - cruunch - cruunch" has slowed perceptibly. He has come to the full realization of his duty and is now drifting along hazily, hoping against hope that he will be fortunate enough to affix himself to some unsuspecting little idea floating aimlessly about the room.

Finally we come to a person who is in the dangerous stage of the Quill-making process, (when essays like this are manufactured) for now it is imperative that his humble contribution make its appearance before the editor very shortly. His slow, regular "cruuuunch - cruuuunch - cruuuunch" is the sound that can only be obtained when heart and soul back up the teeth in their relentless pressure upon pencil wood. He must get an inspiration, and get it quickly. If he doesn't, he goes insane from worry and terminates his promising (?) career either in an asylum, or as another Quill editor; if, however, his inspiration does come, he is spared for the poorhouse.

East by Night

By MARJORIE WINBURN

"I heard the trailing garments of the Night Sweep through her marble halls."

—Longfellow

Darkness had already invaded the portals of East High School as I climbed the flight of stairs from force of habit. Upon reaching the top step and pushing the door open, I could see the long rows of vacant seats. The upper part of the globe in the library was outlined against the dark tiers of books as faint beams of light shone in from the outside.

In the back hall appeared two endless rows of streamlined locks, conspicuous against their inky background as the moonlight was reflected from them, forming an interesting study in perfect symmetry and similarity.

There was a feeble light burning at the opposite end of the corridor on the third floor. The little theatre was buried in deep, long fantastic shadows. The black covers on the typewriters in the upper rooms contributed greatly to the spectral atmosphere.

The first floor was deserted, as was the basement. The desks and machines in the two rooms to my right were visible only as dark, vague, shapeless objects. As I passed the door which leads to the tunnel, I pulled on the knob, not really expecting it to open. It did yield to my pulling, however. The tunnel contained the most dismal, inky obscurity I had ever encountered. I promptly decided that I really should go up to the first floor.

The trophy cases in the front hall seemed to be augmented. The silver loving cups were lustrous as a faint light in the lobby crept forward to touch them.

All three floors and the basement were scenes of utmost desertion and solitude. Materially this was the same building that I had known so well, but was it really the same? The rooms were the same rooms, and the corridors were the same corridors, but there was something greatly lacking. It was the faculty and the students. They had made their departure long ago and would not return until tomorrow. In the meantime the building was wrapped in tomb-like silence.

There was no merry laughter, no mirthful conversation, no hurried consultations before the bell, no promenading in the corridor—nothing but silence.

After I had passed through the front door and had gone down the front steps, I turned to look back. The massive gray edifice looked sad and lonely in the moonlight. I could visualize her happiness on the morrow when all of her gay and loyal companions would come hastening back in the morning sunlight to spend another joyous day with her.

Eating in the Cafeteria

By AVIS HADSALL

Perhaps you don't believe that eating in the cafeteria is a problem; but can you ever recall having eaten your lunch without at least one annoying interruption?

It nearly always happens—just as you raise the piece of cake with the most frosting to your lips, the sharpest pair of knees you ever felt suddenly hits you precisely on the twenty-first vertebra. For the next few seconds it's a toss-up as to whether you will have a cleaner's bill or merely have to wash your face.

And then there is your very good friend who always comes over to your table to speak to you on the day that you buy a candy bar. Of course, you offer him the corner, but he doesn't need to stay long enough for the other three corners, too. Don't misunderstand, he's a very good friend, especially in English. It seems as if he always has his lesson. Yes, indeed, a very good friend, but next week I'll buy my candy bars on Tuesday and Thursday, instead of Wednesday and Friday.

Does your neighbor like soft pie? If so, you should be very careful about the movement of your elbows, or it's a very simple matter to place your elbow none too gently in the middle of the meringue—much to your disgust—and to your neighbor's distaste.

It certainly is a problem which this younger generation is finding difficult to solve.

Canvas of the Heavens

By LENORE TASSIN

"If the stars should appear one night in a thousand years, how would men believe and adore; and preserve for many generations the remembrance of the city of God which had been shown."

—Emerson

Familiarity with a spectacle often robs it of its interest and beauty. Thus it is with the stars which faithfully make their appearance in the heavens and roof us in, night after night, overhead in that limitless space. Any unusual display in the skies, however, turns all eyes upward once again in a renewed interest, which all too frequently dies when the new changes to commonplace.

Astronomy, however, has attracted the attention of the human race from the earliest times, but it is only comparatively recently that men have actually known what the celestial bodies in the heavens really are. The people didn't know that the prince of the heavens, Saturn, was adorned in the most beautiful of all jewelry, those pearly rings. Nor did those people know that Venus far surpassed the many colors of the rainbow in her gay costume.

The stars lighting the heavens were explained by strange myths. Groups of celestial bodies were associated with earthly things. The Ram, Taurus the Bull, and Leo the Lion were pictured by shepherds who tended their flocks at that early time. Naturally, figures of men such as Orion, the warrior, his hand on his sword, perhaps ready to swing it across the heavens; or figures of animals such as Pegasus the horse were placed among the stars.

Comets were regarded with superstitious awe. Sailors believed the blazing torches were sent by the gods to lighten their paths across the seas; or a comet, dusting across the "city of God" was to a warrior a message from some angry god to tell of great misfortunes that were going to befall his people, or a command to stop the swinging of the bloody steel and make serene peace. That fiery dragon of the skies was feared by even the strongest and boldest of warriors—because they were afraid of the unknown. Those men could not realize that the beautiful was not also the terrible.

Then, gradually with improvements on the instruments of the day, they saw a little farther beyond their own small world. New ideas and opinions were slowly revealed to the people, but at an expensive price, for some astronomers were even burned at the stake for asserting and maintaining their very daring statements of new discoveries.

Today it is not only the astronomers who may look into that great magnifying eye and study the beauty of the burning heavens. It is the multitude today who can see more in mere observations through the telescope than Galileo saw in his many decades of intensive study.

Climbing up the ladder and looking through the telescope is as if one were stepping into other great worlds — to celestial bodies flaming through skies in such an awesome and spectacular parade as could never be imagined; to the jeweled Saturn; to the richly garmented Venus; to the armed Orion. Encircled in the glass is the author's most vivid description and the artist's most colorful canvas. Here is the true "city of God."

Raindrops

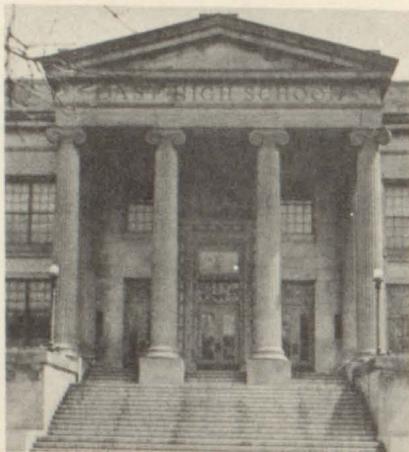

Raindrops gliding,
On the wind they're riding,
'Scaping from their Master,
Faster, ever faster.

In the earth they're hiding,
A little while abiding,
'Til their Master,
Stronger, ever stronger,
Bids them hide no longer.

The sun, so gently,
Smoothly, swiftly,
With joyous exultation,
Brings sweet emancipation
From flower, grass, or tree,
From brook, or lake, or sea.

Notes to a Senior

By LOIS JOHNSON

East High cherishes lofty aspirations for the studentry of the January 1938 senior class.

Knowledge, Citizenship, and Service Although founded an educational institution, she has not only wished for those sons and daughters a greater insight into knowledge, but above all has sought to train them for citizenship and service in the past years of their high school course. Only in those seniors who upon graduation experience an obligatory feeling for serving society will she take pride.

Spirit, Effort, and Self Control She would want her graduates to have been emotionally and permanently instilled with the genuine East High spirit; to have believed that only by positive, determined effort and self control have they progressed. Having stimulated her desire, and having sought to qualify them for such a field by general training of minds

Leadership and by the teaching of a democratic spirit, she would that her senior class be capable of, and outstanding in leadership. She would want them to have learned

Friendship the wealth of true friendship, and to have experienced its power in the building and perfection of character, and in the instilling of courage, hope, and valor.

East High has done all in her power to accomplish her aims. She will feel well recompensed if those graduates leave her building truly noble and poised young men and women, spurred on by honorable ideals to richer and fuller living.

Modern Macbeth

Act I

By BETTY PIERCE

Scene I

At a crowded locker. Snapping of locks and falling of books. Three East High co-eds.

First Co-ed: Where shall we three meet again? In Latin, French, or algebra?

Second Co-ed: When the tests and exams are done. When the battle's fought and won.

Third Co-ed: That will be at 3:15.

First Co-ed: Where the place?

Second Co-ed: At the Matinee Dance.

Third Co-ed: There to meet with that dashing fullback.

First Co-ed: I come, Art Wohlwend.

Second Co-ed: Bob Stuart calls.

All: The orchestra is in the pit,
They're tuning up bit by bit,
When they start to play,
We'll all begin to swing it.

With apologies to Miss McBride

I know not "what's the use,"
But how can I refuse
When Miss McBride
(By teacher's right)
Begs me
To write some poetry.
'Til late at night,
With all my might,
I strain
The contents of my brain.
But still, I fear,
A certain element is missing here.

Pets

By JACK COSTELLO

"Trix, leave that cat alone," is what I am usually saying to my little toy fox terrier around meal time. Because of the fact that Trix has Elmer, my cat thoroughly bluffed, she seems to delight in keeping the cat always fearful of her.

You see, Trix has been the pet of the family for about ten years, which leads her to believe that she should be given the fullest consideration and attention. Elmer, a common, ordinary cat has been with us only about two years, which on the basis of seniority rights entitles him to less respect and consideration. So thinks Trix.

While Elmer was still a kitten, Trix appointed herself supervisor for the instruction of the cat's behavior. She was rather severe though, and I found it necessary to remind her that many of her actions toward Elmer were unbecoming to a lady. Gradually my scoldings had some effect, for now Trix is not quite so oppressive and usually the only scene of battle will be found in the kitchen.

When food is placed on the floor for both animals, Trix usually manages to devour her food in short order so that she can aid the cat in consuming his portion of the food. Giving at least one look in the general direction of the enemy, Trix, with curled lip and ruffled bark, advances. As the dog snarls, the cat retaliates with that characteristic but indescribable feline growl. Elmer's voice generally has an uneven quality, due to the fact that his mouth is full of hastily gulped food. We all know it is somewhat of a task to talk while one's mouth is full. About this time I enter into the argument and reprimand Trix for her greediness and Elmer for not defending his rights.

If Elmer lacks in spirit in warfare with the dog, he certainly makes up for it in other ways. For example, he wasn't a bit bashful about climbing upon the kitchen table one day and doing justice to a freshly baked cake. Also my cat is quite a vegetarian and loves nothing (well . . . nearly nothing) better than to get into a sack of green peppers or asparagus. You can clearly see that Elmer is a cat with spirit. Although he does commit a few misdemeanors he is, in my opinion, a nice cat, and his good qualities outweigh the bad.

These are only a few of the trials and tribulations of a pet owner, but perhaps, as time passes on I'll be able to teach my pets a few manners.

How Furs are made

By HERBERT MERRITT

Have you ever considered the hows and whys of the production of furs? If you haven't, read this and become enlightened (???) For instance consider red fox fur.

The poor little red fox must be instructed from cubhood in the care of his coat. These daily lessons are very necessary, for if the coat is not of the best quality, it may serve to camouflage along with a multitude of others, the lanky form of some college boy.

Most little foxes have high ambitions. These are usually the result of stories told them by their mothers, of how great uncle's cousin on her maternal side once massaged the adam's apple of Mrs. Stuffansuch, number 354 of New York's "400." These ambitions give them the courage and perseverance to comb their fur every morning. Every fox has his weekly fingerwave, and some of the more socially minded ones frequently have permanents.

Of course, before you can have a fur, you must catch a fox. Now the only way to catch a fox is to have a fox hunt. As the horn sounds the beginning of the hunt, the foxes hurriedly comb their fur to make ready for the hounds. When the hounds arrive, the foxes line up and primp while the hounds look them over. When they (the hounds) have decided on their choice, the leader of the hounds says, "you're it," to the chosen one, and the race is on.

When the hounds finally corner the fox, they usually gossip (tch-tch) or play contract until the hunters arrive. Then the fox is placed on the rumble seat of one of the horses, and is taken to the lodge.

At the lodge the fox is put in a pen until spring. When spring has come, each of the captive foxes sheds his fur. Then the hunters gather the furs and let the little foxes go merrily homeward.

I recently received a suggestion for saving time by having the furs tanned while they are yet on the foxes. This is accomplished by allowing the foxes to spend an hour at the beach each day of the week. At the end of this time the little foxes will have their furs beautifully tanned.

Don't ask me "what fur" because I don't know either.

Life

By CHRISTY LARSEN

Life, what word is more compact in meaning than that small word? Many will ask for an explanation, yet in all probability it will never be answered to any satisfaction.

To some, life signifies a glorious romance of dreams, dreams of no consequence; to others it signifies hardships of uncomprehensive greatness; yet to others life means nothing: no expectations, no ambition in life.

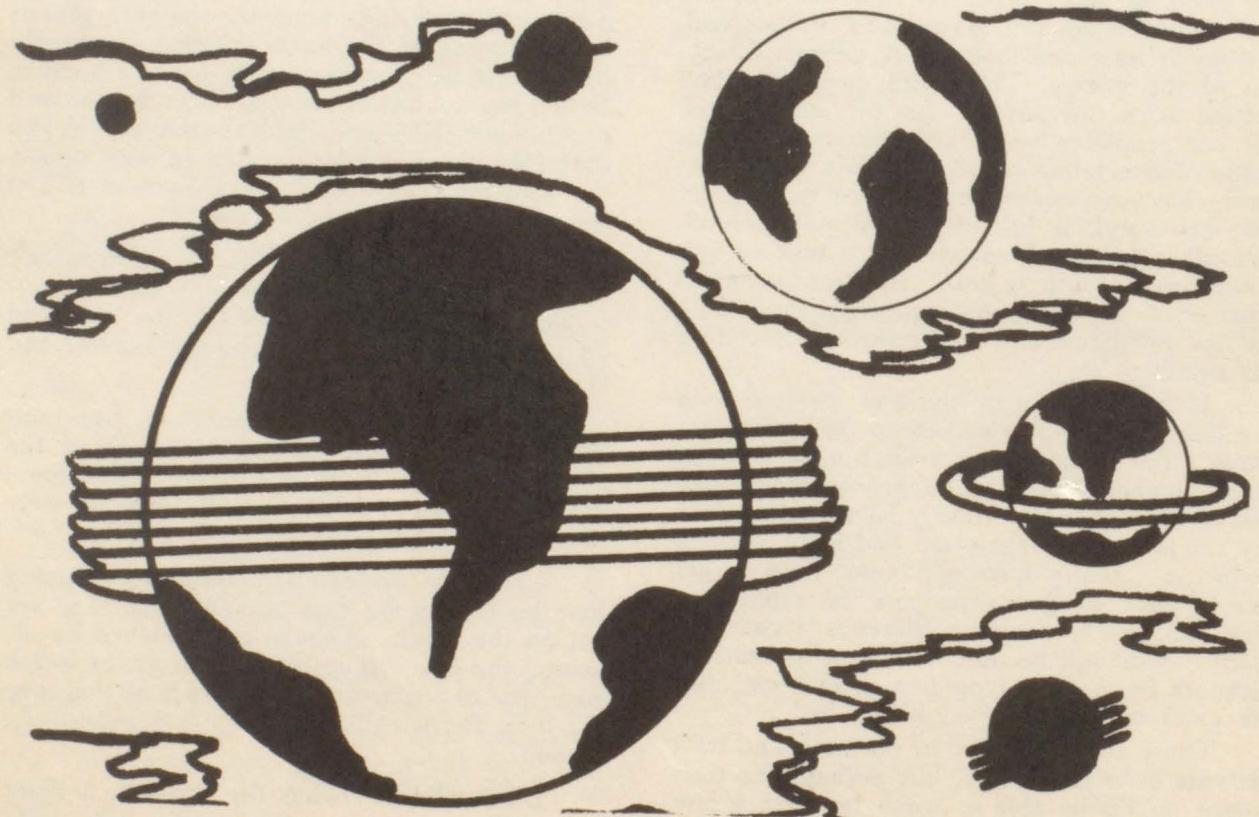

The people to whom life means a glorious romance of dreams are often the people who meet disaster and sorrow, for anticipations are often heartless.

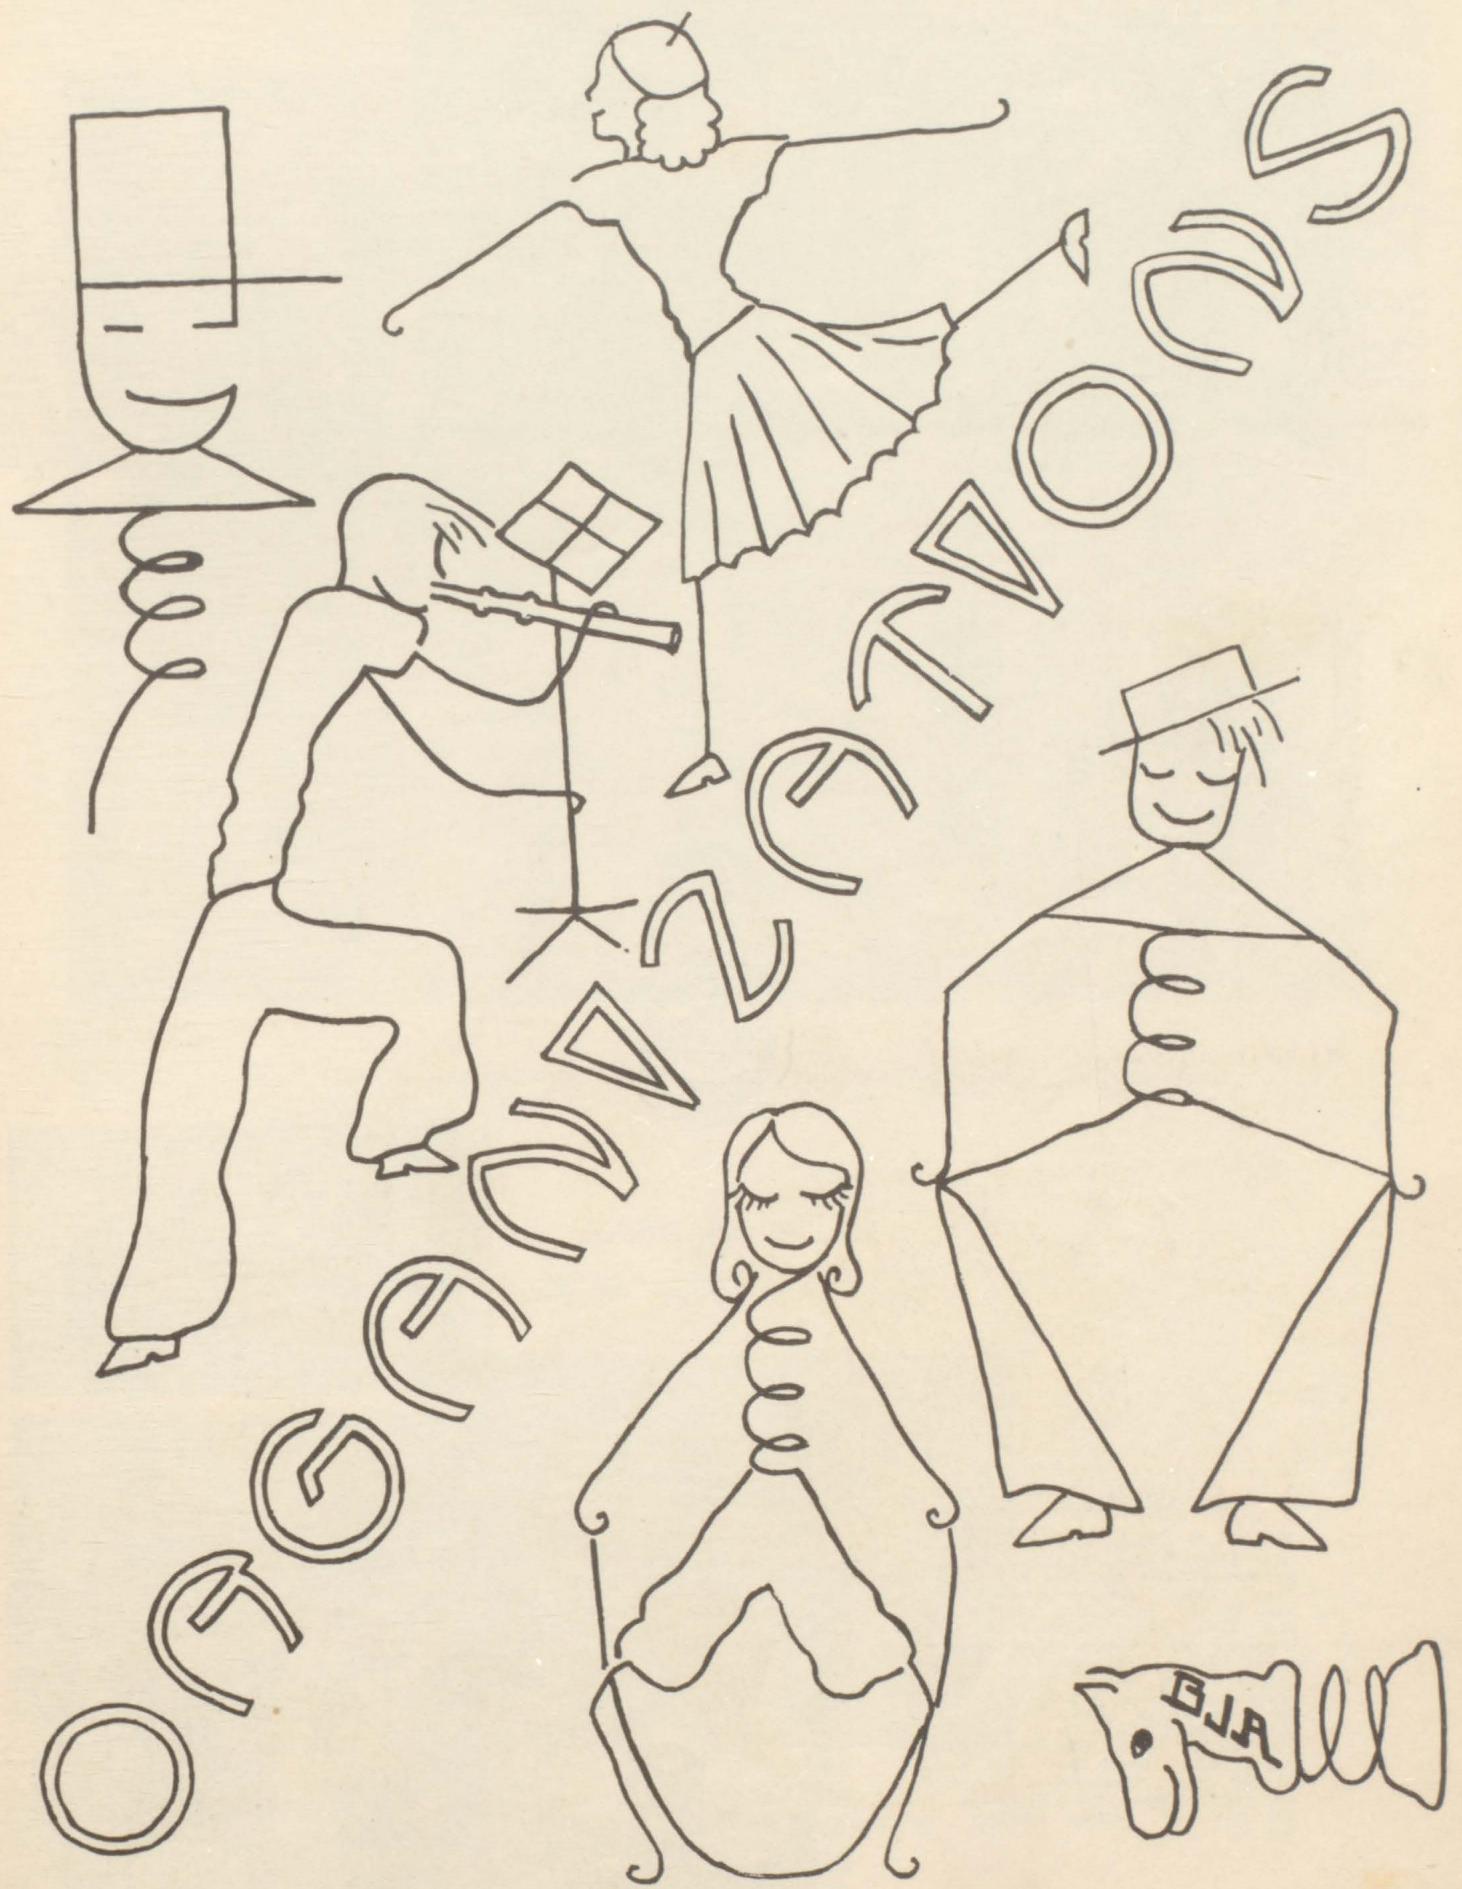

When one enters East High he has not yet learned the art of living, but when he leaves he should have progressed a little toward that high goal of life. He will have lived three glorious years of life in which time he should have learned that life is not all pleasure and pep assemblies.

But to the East High student "life" possesses an entirely different meaning. Each day is looked forward to as one filled with new adventures, some of which are in education, entertainment and recreation. It is during this "brief high school life" that the student becomes possessed of that ever burning spirit of this great institution. This everlasting spirit is known throughout the world as the spirit of endeavor and achievement.

He should have learned and taken one great step in that long ladder of success, the reward of which is wholly worth while striving for.

Students, enrolled in journalism classes in East High school, will take an active part in the general press convocation, comprised of meetings of the National Scholastic Press association, Quill and Scroll society, Iowa High School Press association, National Association of Journalism Directors, and the Iowa Association of Journalism Directors, meeting in Des Moines December 2, 3, and 4.

Speakers

Round table speakers at the convention, who include Forest R. Geneva, advertising manager of the Des Moines Register and Tribune; Emery H. Ruby, professor of journalism at Drake university; and R. W. Johnson, principal of Dubuque senior high school, Dubuque, Iowa, will be introduced by student leaders.

Student Leaders

East High school students who will act as hosts include Roberta Byers, Betty Hansei, Charles H. Krohn, Ruth Lotz, Ruth Lynn Dade, Doris Op, Howard Shetterly, Herbert, Vivian W. Whitman, Margaret Eleanor Yarn.

Contest Held For Debate

Four teams are left in the debate tournament sponsored by the East High Intramural debate association.

These teams are debating the question, "Resolved: That the extension of the consumer's co-operative plan would contribute to the public welfare."

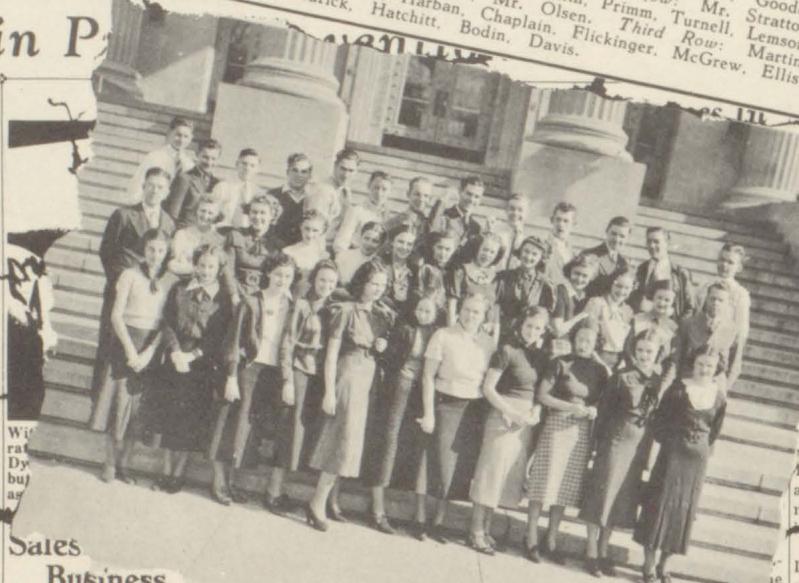

Teams still left in the test are Jim Sweeny and Bert Philby, Franklin Brooks and Floyd Desch, Coralee World and Jack Cockran, and Nina G. Neal and Stanley Barman.

Sales Business

The salesmanship classes under the direction of Mr. V. E. Lindsey are having outside speakers from various lines of business who are speaking to the classes on salesmanship.

R. Warren Taylor spoke on "Personality and How to Acquire It," October 22. On October 29 Mr. H. N. Smith spoke on "Sales Psychology." It is one of the classes on salesmanship.

The chemistry classes, under the direction of Mr. A. G. Siversen, have just finished an experiment on sodium.

Sodium is a metal and is called so because of the fact that it conducts heat and electricity. It is a metal with a metallic luster.

The swimming pool is to be controlled like it is here in the building.

"Other plans about new locks and new paint jobs are being worked out. If these plans are carried out, East High will be more modern and up to date," stated Mr. V. E. Wheeler the chief engineer.

Eat Naught Today, or Tomorrow is Thanksgiving

Students Have Short Vacation

School will be dismissed Thursday and Friday of this week because of the Thanksgiving holidays. The students are given this vacation in order to have enough time to fill up on turkey and all the trimmings. Everyone is expected to come back to school Monday with an appetite that has been well satisfied.

Art Classes Exhibit Work on Third Floor

Art work, exhibited at the Shrine Temple during the State Teachers convention, is being hung on the wall in the third floor corridor by the art department.

Program

Again the East High girls showed their worth in the day in which they cooperated in the annual Thanksgiving donation given to the Des Moines Childrens' Home.

In accordance with the Thanksgiving donations a Thanksgiving program has been arranged by a committee of teachers headed by Miss Engleen. The program will be favored by a speech from Mr. James Sterrett, principal of Warren Harding Junior High school.

Phillip England will give the Lincoln Thanksgiving Proclamation; Doris Gramness will tell of the early Puritan Thanksgiving; Lois Johnson will give a speech on the mother of Thanksgiving, and there will be a musical number.

Quill Cover to Be Modernistic

The cover for the January Quill, designed by Ellsworth Pack, will be very modernistic, with shadows cast before the lettering. The color scheme will be blue, and the binding is to be plastic, the latest thing in modern binding.

Most of the material for the Quill has already gone to the printer, and almost all the pictures have been taken.

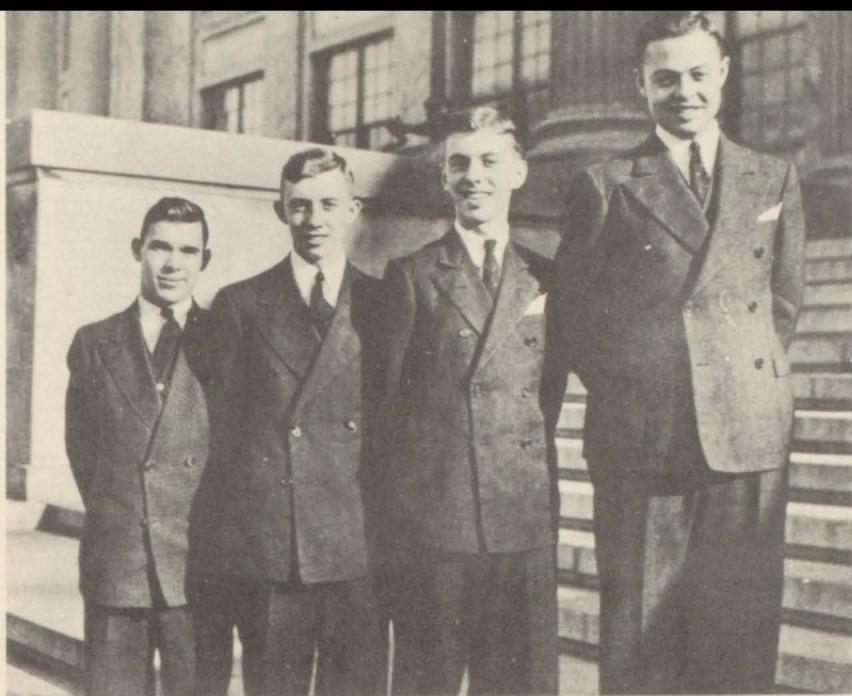

There will be a special literary section, an athletic section, a number of pages of snapshots, and a section devoted to the student council and honor society, as well as the usual division for senior pictures and activities.

From nine hundred to one thousand copies will be made.

Dramatics Classes Study Play Acting

The dramatics classes are putting on one-act plays. In dramatics two, the art of makeup is being studied. In dramatics three and four the school play furnishes the subject matter for study.

Crimson Bombers Win Three Season Games

Prospects for Series Win By Cage Team are Bright

Chances for a successful 1937-38 basketball season seemed to be the brightest in several years. In fact, chances for a city-series win appeared to be very bright.

With seven letter-men back and with a plentiful supply of reserve strength, the team went in against Grinnell December 3 to win 39-27. The following week against Boone they again came out on the long end of the score of 25-20. However the following night against Newton the quintet dropped a close game 19-17.

Seven lettermen back are Earl Rodine, Roe Williams, Art Rees, Art Wohlwend, Clarence Pringle, Albert Thompson, and Bill Gilhousen. Williams and Rees will be lost by graduation in January however.

The schedule yet to be played at the time of this writing is as follows:

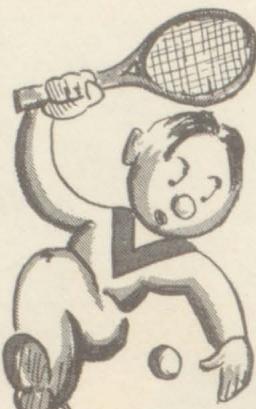

December 17—	Perry, Here
January 7—	Lincoln, There
" 8—	Indianola, Here
" 14—	North, There
" 21—	Roosevelt, Here
" 22—	Indianola, There
" 26—	Dowling, Here
" 29—	Grinnell, There

Track Team Wins Title At Cross-Country Meet

Winning the state high school competition at Iowa City, the cross-country team climaxed a successful season of running.

Winning their first race against Valley Junction between halves of the Valley-East football game, the team went on to register wins in every meet except one.

The team dropped a final race to the Drake University freshmen, after beating Roosevelt of Des Moines, winning the state mile run at Iowa City and winning the state high school cross-country meet at Iowa City.

Net Team Takes City Title Two Boys Tie For First

The East high boys' tennis team smashed their way to a city title this fall while the girls' net team took third in the girls' division. Matches were held at Birdland courts.

Both of the boys singles reached the finals but were prevented from playing off their tie for first place because of darkness.

The girls placed third with a score of 4 in the city meet, while Roosevelt took first place, North second, and Lincoln fourth.

Second Team Wins Series

The East high "Canaries," the second team of football aspirants, lost two games, won five, and tied one during the 1937 season.

Starting with a loss to Johnston Station and a second loss to Ames, the team won the next five games against North high, Valley Junction, Lincoln, a return game with Lincoln, and Roosevelt. The last game of the season, a return game with North high resulted in a tie.

The Canaries scored a total of 99 points to 54 for their opponents. The team is coached by Mr. C. E. Gregory, new teacher and coach at East high. Mr. Gregory formerly taught at Hedrick, Iowa, and was head coach at Osceola high school for five years.

The wins against city schools gave the second team the second-team city series title.

Three of Five Losses Are To Unbeaten Teams

Looking over the 1937 football records, the squad finds a total of 87 points scored for the season. Three wins and four losses, in a schedule that included some of the best teams in the state, give a percentage of .375. Three teams on the season's card remained unbeaten at the end of the year. They were Mason City, Davenport, and North high of Des Moines.

Opening the season with a win, 6-2, over Valley Junction, the team dropped the second game to Davenport with a score of East 7, Davenport 20.

The second win came the following week over Oskaloosa, East scoring three touchdowns to Oskaloosa's one, and leaving a score of 18-7. The next game, conceded to be a push-over before the game, proved to be a surprise. Dowling high of Des Moines intercepted a pass that netted them a touchdown and made a safety to win 9 to 6.

Mason City came next and remained undefeated after the game. The score board at that game showed 19-6 at the end of play.

Entering the city series, East gained confidence with the first game as they defeated Lincoln 18 to 0. Against Roosevelt the following week, the team played bang-up ball but went home the loser by one touchdown and point, scored in the last 15 seconds. Markers wrote East 14, Roosevelt 21.

The final game, with North high, proved to be a thriller before a crowd of 13,000. A last quarter rally for the "Crimson Bombers" still left them on the short end of the tally of 19-12.

The final results of the city series left East in third place, with North gaining the crown and Roosevelt coming in second place.
